Module aims

This module aims to broaden students' awareness of the features of spoken English in a wide range of situations, both formal and informal, in order for them to become more effective communicators. This will be done by introducing students to different genres of spoken English for analysis and discussion. Students will also have frequent opportunities to use English in the classroom and the language laboratory in order to become adept at choosing an appropriate register and to enable them to produce the sounds of the language essential for effective communication. In addition, this module will expose students to a wide variety of authentic listening materials in order to raise awareness of how Culture and World Englishes may influence language.

Module outline

This module is designed for students who want to improve their listening and speaking skills in English in both formal and informal settings. Students will develop strategies for active listening and learn to deal with unfamiliar language. Seminars will consider the importance of audience, purpose, and non-verbal signals in a variety of situations. Students will have opportunities to participate in workshops in which they will be involved in activities such as discussions, role-plays and class presentations. The class tutor will monitor these activities and give feedback on features of spoken English including levels of formality, prosodic features and lexical appropriateness.

Learning outcomes

At the end of this module students should be able to:

- demonstrate awareness of the prosodic features of their English that need to be addressed;
- analyse a speaker’s use of language in terms of formality;
- understand authentic spoken English with confidence and ease, including colloquialisms and slang;
- deal effectively with varied rates of delivery, types of voice and a variety of accents;
- recognise and comment on the importance of intonation and stress in the interpretation of meaning;
- apply strategies developed in class to aid comprehension of spoken English outside the classroom.

- work creatively and flexibly as part of a team;
- respond to feedback in order to communicate with increased competence in a variety of situations;
- handle the language system with improved intelligibility;
- interact in English, expressing ideas coherently and articulately;
- speak in English showing awareness of a wide variety of registers and contexts;
- analyse and present materials using a range of media approaches;
- gather and process information from different linguistics sources;
- express attitude based on an awareness of Culture and World Englishes.
